THANK YOU NOTES

ADAMS

As we approach the end of what has certainly been an interesting road to recovery, I look back at how far we have come. There are many emotions that might be experienced when faced with the circumstances we were. One definitely stands out amongst the others, and that is, without question, our overwhelming gratitude.

Words cannot begin to describe how grateful we are to all the people that came to our aid. In our time of need, our friends, neighbors and families all came to our rescue. It was truly an inspiring thing in itself. Whether it was a helping hand, simple words of encouragement, donations, prayers, gifts, cards, or even just something as simple as thought, every gesture and show of love helped us more than we ever thought possible.

So from the bottom of our hearts we'd like to formally thank all the people that took time out of their lives to support us, in any way at all. Also, a special thanks to Greg Schneider, if it wasn't for his consideration, attention to detail, and quick action when he found me trapped in my wrecked car, I would not be here today.

We had started to write individual thank you cards to you all, but the list quickly became much too long to be a feasible endeavor. So for that we apologize and we can only hope that these words find you all. We are forever moved by the outpouring show of love that came our way and cannot in a million years express our extreme gratitude for it. Thank you all, and I hope that someday we can repay the love shown to us all from all of you.

Sincerely,

Aric J. Adams (Sr.) and family 39-27p

CITY OF LAKE CITY

Winter Snow Reminders

Sidewalks

Please remember to keep your sidewalk safe for pedestrians during the winter season by keeping them free from snow and ice accumulations. The city will conduct inspections of the all sidewalks 48 hours after the cessation of a snow event. Any sidewalk not cleared at the time of inspection will be cleared by the city, and the cost of the sidewalk clearing and de-icing will be billed to the property owner.

Streets

Lake City's Winter Parking Restrictions are effective October 1st through April 1st. When continuous or intermittent snow, ice, or similar precipitation has accumulated to a depth of four (4) inches or more, street parking restrictions apply until all the snow and ice have been removed. After a street is fully plowed, vehicles are allowed to park back on the street. "Fully plowed" means the street is completely cleared and plowed to the full width of the street.

WHAT DRIVES MASTER GARDENERS TO SHARE THEIR GREEN THUMBS?
U of M Extension Service

Minnesotans have dependable allies to help make our communities greener and healthier: U of M Extension Master Gardeners. The 2,300-plus volunteer master gardeners bring research-driven knowledge to the communities they serve and teach.

What does that mean for Minnesota? Through the 130,000 hours of service they provide annually across the state via Extension, Master Gardeners leave a large imprint.

"We're empowering volunteers to share research and best practices. In the process, we're promoting healthy people, healthy plants, and a healthy planet," said Tim Kenny, statewide director of the Master Gardener program

They're on the front lines of water conservation and quality, and they're teaming with local partners to combat invasive plant species and safeguard the natural habitats that embody the Minnesota outdoors. Master gardeners shepherd efforts to build rain gardens that help protect groundwater and aquatic life while preventing erosion.

They guide projects to establish community gardens so that seniors and underserved populations can have better access to fresh produce. Partnerships between Master Gardeners and schools and farmers markets dot the Minnesota landscape.

"Through master gardeners, Extension offers a chance to learn, network, and give back to our communities. Together, we can turn the next generation on to the wonders of the garden," said Scott County master gardener Denise Moen.

And master gardeners are particularly passionate about reaching out to young people, teaching them horticulture's essential role in environmental sustainability. Through master gardeners, Minnesotans learn, network, and give back to communities, turning the next generation on to the wonders of the garden.

Rigorously trained and working side-by-side with University scientists and educators, master gardeners epitomize citizen science. "They are as passionate about the field as any of us who teach or do research," says Kathy Zuzek, Extension horticulture educator.

People can learn more about master gardeners at http://www.extension.umn.edu/garden/master-gardener/.

WHAT DRIVES MATT RUSSELL TO THINK TREES NEED TECHNOLOGY TO SURVIVE?

By Matt Russell
Forest Resources Specialist and Assistant Professor
U of M Extension Service

The forest products industry contributes 60,000 jobs and more than $9 billion in value to Minnesota's economy. But we need forests for something else: absorbing the carbon that is warming the earth's climate.

Carbon is emitted through industrial manufacturing, transportation, and other activities. But 16 percent of it gets "grabbed" by forests and wood, which can use it for new growth. That drives the work of Matt Russell, a U of M Extension forest resources specialist and assistant professor in the College of Food, Agricultural and Natural Resources Sciences who is dedicated to maintaining resilient and productive forests.

"Forests are our best tool to reduce carbon dioxide emissions," says Russell. "As long as we keep our forests healthy, they will continue to provide the ecosystem services we rely on."

Russell partnered with the USDA Forest Service to create a Forest Carbon Xplorer app. The app uses forest inventory data to show landowners and managers how much carbon they have on their land and how it's distributed. Even a lifelong forest owner might not know the meaning of, say, 10,000 pounds of carbon, so the app provides equivalencies to gallons of gas, home energy use, and other comparisons. They can use the information to help make decisions on planting new trees and investing in making the forests they have healthier.

"What drives me are the rich interactions I have with landowners, natural resource professionals, and others who tell me about their biggest problems. That provides the best perspective for what I need to be researching and teaching."

Forest health is a major issue in Minnesota. Climate change and invasive species threaten our 17 million acres of forestland, nearly half of which is privately owned. Mill closures and other economic changes can drive owners to sell land for development. Russell helps family forest landowners maintain a profit while adapting to these new realities.

"Forests contribute to clean water, clean air, and quality of life," says Russell. "With one-third of the state covered in forest land, Minnesota can teach the world how to make sustainable decisions for everyone."

People can learn more about Extension forestry programs at http://www.extension.umn.edu/environment/trees-woodlands/.

WHAT DRIVES JEFF COULTER TO THINK WE CAN DOUBLE OUR FOOD PRODUCTION?

Jeff Coulter
Agronomist and Associate Professor
U of M Extension Service

From the plains of Minnesota to the hills of East Africa, corn continues to help meet the needs of a growing population. Given that our numbers could reach 9 billion by 2050, increasing corn production is an important goal.

But increased production means that farmers need help reducing their environmental footprint, and that's where Jeff Coulter comes in. Coulter, a University of Minnesota Extension agronomist and associate professor in the College of Food, Agricultural and Natural Resource Sciences, is especially concerned with nitrogen losses from farm fields.

He and his team conduct research on 15 working farms, as well as at four University of Minnesota Research and Outreach Centers. "Farmers are active research partners," Coulter notes.

In collaboration with farmers, U.S. Department of Agriculture scientists, and other U faculty, he has shown that corn planted in rotation after alfalfa requires less nitrogen than is usually applied. A lot less—and sometimes none at all.

"When I can show which crop practices bring about a positive change on a real working farm, that builds farmers' confidence in trying something new."

Coulter works with farmers and agriculture professionals on this and other agronomic research to help their operations be more productive and profitable—while protecting our soil and water.

"My research can help reduce the environmental impact of growing corn while increasing yield, so the farmer can focus on all the other aspects of managing the farm business," he says.

People can learn more about Jeff Coulter's research at http://news.extension.umn.edu/2014/11/coulter-honored-among-under-40.html and http://www.extension.umn.edu/agri culture/crops/.
