PREVENT FLASH FIRES AND EXPLOSIONS: WATCH FOR DEEP-PIT MANURE FOAM
By Chuck Clanton, PE, Professor - College of Food, Agricultural and Natural Resource Sciences and Larry Jacobson, PE, Agricultural Engineer and Professor U of M Extension Service

Manure deep-pits under swine barns in the Upper Midwest are getting full in this time of year, and concern over pit foaming is especially high. Pork producers should be vigilant.

Although the frequency of flash fires or barn explosions in deep-pit pig buildings has been significantly reduced since the peak of this problem in 2009, foam still can occur. Tragically, that resulted in two fatalities earlier in 2015.

To prevent an explosion or a flash fire, ventilate or exchange air in the barn to dilute the concentration of methane gas in the air.

The presence of foam bubbles on top of liquid manure in a deep pit contains about 70 percent methane. Any activity that disrupts the foam releases this stored methane or natural gas can be dangerous. Methane is extremely explosive when between 4 and 15 percent of the air by volume. If you are not sure if foam is present or if there is only a thin layer, take precautions.

Always check for foam when there is any interruption in normal activities. This includes changing (turning) groups of pigs, running soaking nozzles or power washing, agitating and pumping liquid manure in the pit, or any maintenance work (such as welding) inside the barn. These activities disrupt the foam and release methane.

If foam is detected in the manure pit prior to any of these activities, immediately take these precautions:

Run the exhaust fans in the barn to at least the mild weather or fall/spring ventilation rate. This will provide roughly 25 to 35 air exchanges per hour in the barn or, for a grow-finish barn, 30 to 40 cfm/pig. Use of wall fans are preferable in addition to pit fans, since the airflow rates from pit fans are commonly compromised or reduced significantly by high manure levels in the pit and duct transitions on pit fans.

When foam is present, eliminate all ignition sources inside the barn: pilot lights or electrostatic spark on water and space heaters, sparking switches on lights and non-enclosed electric motors, welding, grinding, cigarettes, cigars or pipes.

Extension and research personnel from the University of Minnesota, Iowa State University and University of Illinois developed warning stickers in English and Spanish to post inside pig barns. Stickers will be available from pork producer associations in all three states.

THANK YOU NOTES

AHLERS

The two little words "Thank You" just don't seem sufficient to show my gratitude for all the planning and work that went into my cancer benefit.

I am humbled by the generosity of those who ordered bracelets, donated raffle prizes, rode in the poker run, donated, processed, and cooked the hog, offered to contribute salad or bars, helped with set-up, serving, and clean up.

I'll never forget the ride, the friendly faces, or the hugs. It was truly a fairy tale day from the beginning to the very end.

I appreciate your support so much.

Linda Ahlers 31-19p

THANK YOU NOTES

DOHRN

A special thank you to Robin, Terry, Melaney, Taylor, Tina and everyone that came to my 80th birthday party.

Thank you for all the cards, gifts and the good food. Thank you for the surprises, they will always be remembered.

Thank You!
The Lake City Lions Club would like to thank ALL OUR GREAT FRIENDS who attended and made our Fall Festival Fund-raiser Dinner and Raffle a great success.
We would like to especially thank:
Huettl's Meats and Fiesta Foods for their generous donations to the raffle.
The raffle gave away over $3,400 in cash prizes, a rifle, two Fiesta Foods gift certificates, two $150 Huettl's Meats certificates, a fun prize of 99 bottles of beer on the wall and a case of wine.
We would like to thank the Lake City Sportsman's Club for providing such a beautiful facility and friendly staff.
Our first donation from the event is a $750 donation to the Lake City Athletic Booster Club who provided the great young students who served, bussed tables and helped clean up.
Please consider attending this event next year and help us help our community.
