Continuing the mental health and suicide conversation: Connection and belonging

By Erik Sievers
Executive Director
Hiawatha Valley Mental Health Center

Erik Sievers

Many of us have the opportunity to create space for connection, caring and sharing. These are true in the moment opportunities to break down years of stigma around mental health that today still so greatly impacts well-being and health for so many. Stigma only leads to silence. And silence about suicide or mental health does not contain the ripple effect that occurs when someone dies by suicide or has untreated mental health needs; it just leaves people feeling isolated.

Research shows that a key resource that helps human beings be well includes connection and feeling a sense of belonging. Evidence further shows that lack of connection, purpose, belonging and feeling like a burden are risk factors for increased mental health conditions, suicide ideation, suicide attempts, and death by suicide. For many, we may mask the pain, stress, and anxiety we experience which creates challenges in ever being our true authentic self.

Families within the Lake City community and surrounding communities are not immune to the pain, loss, and ripple effect that occur when someone dies by suicide and when someone struggles with their mental health. Loss of loved ones in the Lake City community and surrounding communities by suicide has opened an immediate opportunity to talk about suicide as a public health issue that impacts many. The caring people of the Lake City community are stepping up and stepping into this space to have conversations about suicide, mental health, and substance use.

I was fortunate to witness this caring community on Wednesday, Jan. 10, as Lincoln High School hosted the showing of My Ascension. The details of that event were detailed in a recent article in the Lake City Graphic. I want to applaud Lake City Schools, the Hegge family through Aiden's Light and the entire Lake City community for stepping up to be a part of the conversation and solution around suicide and mental health.

Following this event, I have observed many in Lake City wanting to continue the great work started by the school district, Aiden's Light and others around normalizing the conversation and reducing stigma that continues to be reinforced through society in various forms. The more we can learn about mental health and suicide early, to learn about it and then have conversations about it, the less stigma there will be around it. There is hope so let's continue in this discussion! Hiawatha Valley Mental Health Center and others in the community are actively working on strategies to best keep the conversation about suicide, mental health and substance use going. The conversation from Wednesday, Jan. 10 is the beginning of community connection and conversations around mental health, suicide, substance and more is to come!

If you or someone you care for is struggling with their mental health and/or experience thoughts of suicide, help is available 24/7 through the national 988 Suicide & National Crisis Lifeline or by dialing 1-844-274-7472.
